

Is everyone that works for the Electric Companies crazy? Before they start down this road toward using the power lines for Internet usage, they should be looking at making the power lines and command centers safe against terrorist activities. After the fiasco this past year with the power outages in the NorthEast States, they need to take a serious look to guard against this happening in the future. They need to ensure that the escalation of power outage can be stopped even quicker or ensure that the power outage area can be controlled better than what it is now.

The FCC Board needs to be either incorporated into the Homeland Security or answerable to the Homeland Security instead of the automatic passage of the various requests that the large-monied corporations want.

The FCC needs to look at how the various requests would affect the general public before voting on these requests.

In other words, the FCC board needs to wake up and smell the coffee before they automatically approve the large-monied corporations requests.
